

ARTICLE APPEARED
ON PAGE 17

U.S. NEWS &amp; WORLD REPORT

25 June 1979

STAT

Washington Whispers.

Officers that Adm. Stansfield Turner brought with him when he became director of the Central Intelligence Agency are finding their careers damaged as they return to Navy service. Unhappiness with Turner within the military is so severe that it tends to rub off on those associated with him.

* * * *

Pentagon officials got an impressive testimonial to the quality of U.S. intelligence when the Soviets provided a detailed list of their strategic weapons as part of the SALT II accord: The Russian list matched almost exactly the data provided by U.S. satellites and other forms of intelligence.